

Jami distrikt

Proposed as a pseudo-documentary, Jami district tells us the story of Jamena, an imaginary village on the border between Serbia, Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

There, eminent scientists come across a site dating back to the Paleolithic period. The discovery was immense because it called our knowledge on the human race into question. Apparently, Homo sapiens is much older than what we were given to believe!

This groundbreaking find is important for the whole of humanity and more particularly for the Serbs, the Croats and the Bosnians. As Jamena is located over the three areas, a series of rather absurd theories were invoked to determine which nation was the oldest and which could claim "ownership" to Jamena.

This led to a war between the three countries in which the major powers of the world got involved and ended with the destruction of Jamena.

Jami distrikt, blending theatre, video, live music, and performed by three explosive actresses bursting with ravishing energy, illustrates the absurdity of national divides in this the 21st century and addresses the issues of identity in modern-day society!
